This is a great tool. Easy to use and well thought-out. The only major limitation is that it does not separate that layer by layer. I recently tried using the eraser over a girl's nudity in an underwater photo. The color started to go wrong along her pubic area and along her legs and caused her to look like a lobster. I ended up erasing parts of her legs completely so the viewer would not pick up on that part of her. Hey Eddie, This is not the first time I have mentioned this, but the quality of the new browser is way better. It is quicker and most of the new features are in it. It is a very smart update. It does the job well. This month the Camera Raw update will allow you to remove noise from JPEG files as well. Okay, enough for now. I decided to upgrade to the September 2019 update to Photoshop Elements. I had noticed the very bad "subscription" link at the bottom of the installer which would certainly lead one to believe that they were being charged for a subscription to Creative Cloud and that they could cancel it once a month. After all, it told me that I was being billed for $59 per month even though I'd signed up for an annual subscription but I wanted nothing to do with Creative Cloud. I simply canceled the subscription. Besides that, I install Elements as a stand-alone application and have not opted to install it on my desktop I've also upgraded to Adobe Photoshop CC 2019. I manage clients' images, whether for personal reference or to maintain a database for color correction or auto-resize to the latest standards for use on social media. I also use the Adobe Camera Raw 2019.

"We're excited about the new innovations that make the world's most advanced image editing applications even smarter, more collaborative and easier to use across surfaces," said Shantanu Narayen, CEO of Adobe. "Adobe Photoshop for iOS and Photoshop CC for Apple CarPlay are uniquely positioned to help our users get better results faster, and we're going to continue our innovative partnership with Apple to continue expanding on that." The new share for review technology enables users to collaborate while working in Photoshop, saving time together and accelerating the delivery of amazing user experiences. Users can simply choose to "share for review," starting a new state in Photoshop by adding a comment, providing a helpful recommendation, or instantly sharing edits. After a select amount of time, which may depend on the scope of the collaboration, the comments are saved for the group, and other users can access any don't show card to view the collection. Not only can they see what was shared and reviews comments, but users can actually also remove comments if they wish. For example, if a person creates an amazing gradient on a web page but doesn't have the expertise in a complex graphic design software, he or she uses Photoshop to create the gradient and then "shares for review" in the browser. Share for review is also ideal for content collaboration because of the ability to work with site owners, web designers, and content creators who are not familiar with Photoshop. It makes sense to save time and provide guidance when the content is in its most basic form.
