The cellular accumulation of doxorubicin was studied in five human tumour cell lines with different sensitivity to doxorubicin (HUT2, K562, HL60, A549, MCF7). The possibility that the anti-tumour activity of doxorubicin might be based on differences in drug accumulation was examined. For this purpose, the cellular uptake of doxorubicin was studied in the presence of bicarbonate (24 mM) and compared with that in the presence of acidic media (pH 6.5). The uptake was found to be time and concentration dependent. The cellular doxorubicin content was increased by more than 5-fold in the presence of 24 mM bicarbonate. The pH dependency of the uptake was not significant. These results indicate that bicarbonate can be used to enhance the uptake of doxorubicin in tumour cells. The differences in accumulation of doxorubicin were closely correlated with the cell sensitivity to doxorubicin. In the most sensitive tumour cell line, K562, doxorubicin accumulation was increased 4.2-fold in the presence of bicarbonate. No significant difference in uptake was found between sensitive and resistant tumour cell lines in the absence of bicarbonate. The results indicate that differences in the uptake of doxorubicin in the presence of bicarbonate can serve as a basis for the differential efficacy of doxorubicin between various tumour cells.Q: What exactly does getchar() do in C?
